Boy, 6, suffers severe head injuries in crash

COLLISION A six-year-old boy was rushed to hospital with life-threatening head injuries after a fuel truck collided with a minivan in south Ottawa yesterday morning.

Emergency crews were called to the intersection of Fallowfield and Merivale roads around 10:30 a.m. Paramedics found a minivan carrying four children and two adults that had been struck on the passenger side.

The van was seriously damaged, said paramedic acting superintendent Steve McMahon. The children, ages three through 11, were in car seats, except for the 11-year-old. A six-year-old boy was taken to hospital with life-threatening head injuries.

The three other children and the female adult passenger were taken to hospital with non-life-threatening injuries. The male driver of the van was unhurt. Police are investigating the crash.

'More questions than answers' ahead for Afghan police training mission

POLICING The RCMP has started looking at how to continue the police training mission in Afghanistan after the Canadian military pulls out next year, the Mounties' top man said Saturday.

But Commissioner William Elliot noted there are a number of details and variables to be worked out, among them, who would protect and transport the police trainers as they go about their business in the country.

"We're at the beginning of looking at options, but there are a lot more questions than answers at the moment," Elliot told reporters after wrapping up a brief visit to Kandahar.

- There are 48 Canadian police trainers at the joint Canadian and American reconstruction base in Kandahar. But they rely heavily on the Canadian army for protection and movement.

Defence Minister Peter MacKay dropped a broad hint a few weeks ago that Canada's continued involvement in Afghanistan would likely revolve around police training, but he gave few specifics.

Elliot said the RCMP is prepared to carry on, but will need the participation of municipal forces across the country, in much the same way it has for other international missions.

"Working with all of the police community in Canada, we'll be able to carry out whatever task the government of Canada gives us in Afghanistan," he said.

City's cops in higher demand

Service calls up 5% in 2010

TIM WIECLAWSKI
tim.wieclawski@metronews.ca

It's shaping up to be a very busy year for Ottawa police.

According to its 2010 first-quarter performance report, police responded to 87,711 calls for service during the first three months of this year.

That's a five per cent increase over the same period in 2009, and more than 1,200 more calls than the first quarter of 2007, which was the Ottawa Police Service's busiest year on record.

"We don't know (why) for sure, but it's not a bad thing," said River Ward Councillor and Ottawa Police Service board member Maria McRae.

"When you see a spike in calls for service, that actually means the police mantra of 'make the right call' ... is working. We'd rather have more calls, and actually less incidents of people not calling."

Ottawa police have handled an average of 366,000 calls per year over the past five years.

In the first three months of this year, police responded to 800 more Priority 1 calls for service than last year. The number of emergency calls requiring immediate, on-scene police presence rose five per cent to 16,225 citywide.

However, the response

"When you see a spike in calls for service, that actually means the police mantra of 'make the right call' ... is working."

Coun. Maria McRae

times to those calls have dipped to the lowest point in years.

Ottawa police have set a target of responding to 90 per cent of Priority 1 calls within 15 minutes. Although it has not achieved that goal since 2007, the first-quarter performance is usually closest.

In 2010, 88.5 per cent of Priority 1 calls were answered within 15 minutes. That's 0.4 per cent lower than 2009, 0.2 per cent lower than 2008 and 1.5 per cent lower than 2007.

In the report, police Chief Vern White wrote that the organization's inability to reach a 90 per cent response target may indicate "that the police service has reached an operational maximum under the current schedule, call response protocol, staffing levels, and call volumes."

McRae said she expects the new south end police centre on Prince of Wales Drive, included in the 2010 budget, will improve response times.

Walkers foot it for MS drive

$350K goal set as more than 1,500 take part in annual walk

STEVE COLLINS
for Metro Ottawa

More than 1,500 walkers put their best foot forward yesterday for the annual MS Walk at Tunney's Pasture.

The walk began with the release of 500 red balloons into the air, each representing a $20 donation to the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada, which funds research and services for those with MS.

Last year, Ottawa walkers raised $323,000 in sponsorships, and this year's goal is $350,000.

Adam Goldberg, a pharmacy technician at Shoppers Drug Mart and the walk's top fundraiser, single-handedly raised $10,000 this year. Diagnosed with MS in 2004, he has been walking every year since 2006. He began fundraising for this year's walk in November.

"I figured I can do this and I know people with MS who cannot," he said, "So I thought why not use my abilities to raise money?" Other stars of the MS walk are some 200 volunteers who keep the day's events running smoothly and cheer on the walkers from the sidelines.

"I would say they are one of the most important volunteer groups," said volunteer co-ordinator Nadine

Lee, "Because they really encourage all of our walkers when they're coming back, just giving them that extra push and motivation to finish the walk. Two point five kilometres might not sound like a long distance, but for some people living with MS it's quite a trek."

Also doing her part was high school student Ophira Calof, who's organized A Night for Music, a benefit concert at Carleton University's Kailash Mital Theatre, for May 26, World MS Day.

Community centre opens after $700K expansion

CARLETON HEIGHTS River Ward Councillor Maria McRae, city staff and community residents celebrated the grand reopening of an expanded and renovated Carleton Heights Community Centre yesterday. The $700,000 expansion adds about 1,500 square feet to the centre in the form of an additional multipurpose room, and includes new flooring, refurb bished community rooms and a resurfaced parking lot.

The building has also undergone numerous improvements to increase accessibility, including adjustments to washrooms, doors and hallways to make them more wheelchair- and walker-friendly, and Braille on centre signs for the visually impaired.

McRae said she was par ticularly proud of the project because it was the first such expansion to be accomplished via a partnership between the city and the Carleton Heights Area Residents' Association.

The volunteer community organization contributed $350,000 to the project from the proceeds of centre recreation programs and other events. The city footed the other half of the bill through its Major Capital Community Partnership Project.

"This collaborative effort was indeed a true partnership, and I want to acknowledge the dedication of city staff for ensuring that this important community project took place," said Charles Yellen, chair of the residents' association.

Market street changes set for trial run

BYWARD Traffic will be flowing a little differently around the ByWard Market this summer.

As of this morning, William Street will become a dead end where it meets York Street. Next week the flow of traffic on the one-way street will be reversed, so vehicles leaving a city owned parking garage near that intersection will exit onto Clarence Street.

The changes will be in effect as a trial at least until September when the city council could vote to permanently change the street.

The intersection of William and York streets is expected to become a public gathering place that will encourage more pedestrians and bicycles in the ByWard Market.

Another goal of the proposed $275,000 project is to decrease the negative health impacts of air pollution from vehicles on market vendors, residents, and visitors.

The trial run is intended to determine the impact the street changes could have on other intersections, particularly at Clarence and Dalhousie streets. A right turning lane could be added to that intersection if it's required.

Girls poisoned?

Dozens of Afghan schoolgirls have fallen ill in recent days after reporting a strange odour in their classrooms in northern Afghanistan, prompting an investigation into whether they were targeted by militants who oppose education for girls or victims of mass hysteria.

Either way, the reports from three schools within three kilometres of one another in Kunduz province have raised alarm in a city threatened by the Taliban and their militant allies.

The latest cases occurred yesterday, when 13 girls became sick, Kunduz provincial spokesman Mahbobullah Sayedi said. Another 47 complained of dizziness and nausea the day before, and 23 fell ill last Wednesday. All complained of a strange smell in class before they fell ill.

"I came out from the main hall, and I saw lots of other girls scattered everywhere," Anesa, a nine-year-old who was hospitalized briefly yesterday, told The Associated Press. "Then suddenly, I felt that I was losing my balance and falling."

None of the illnesses was serious and the girls were only hospitalized for a short time. The Health Ministry said blood samples were inconclusive and were being sent to Kabul for further testing to determine the cause of the illnesses.

"This is a matter of concern not only for us but for the families," Sayedi said, blaming the sicknesses on "enemies" who oppose education for girls.

Don't phone E.T., Hawking warns

SCIENCE British astrophysicist Stephen Hawking says aliens are out there, but it could be too dangerous for humans to interact with extraterrestrial life.

Hawking claims in a new documentary that intelligent alien lifeforms almost certainly exist, but warns that communicating with them could be "too risky."

He speculates most extraterrestrial life will be similar to microbes, or small animals — but adds advanced lifeforms may be "nomads, looking to conquer and colonize."

The Discovery Channel said yesterday it will broadcast Stephen Hawking's Universe in Britain next month.

Immigration battle looming in Arizona

Thousands of protesters descended on Arizona's Capitol yesterday to rally against a tough new immigration law they say will lead to police harassment of legal immigrants and U.S. citizens who look Hispanic.

Civil rights advocates have vowed to challenge the law in court, saying it would undoubtedly lead to racial profiling. The Rev. Al Sharpton said that just as freedom riders battled segregation in the South in the 1960s, he would organize "freedom walkers" to challenge the Arizona bill.

with people who refuse to give identification and force arrest," Sharpton said yesterday in New York.

Gov. Jan Brewer signed the bill into law Friday. It requires police to question people about their immigration status — including asking for identification — if they suspect someone is in the country illegally. The law also toughens restrictions on hiring illegal immigrants for day labour and knowingly transporting them. Supporters have dismissed concerns of racial profiling, saying the law prohibits the use of race or nationality as the sole basis for an immigration check.

Brewer has ordered state officials to develop a training course for officers to learn what constitutes reasonable suspicion someone is in the U.S. illegally.

Hundreds gathered outside the state capitol in Phoenix Friday shouting that the bill would lead to civil rights abuses. Brewer said critics were "overreacting." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

No end in sight for Thai standoff

PROTESTS Thai protesters occupying parts of Bangkok to press their demands for new elections vowed yesterday to fight on following a breakdown of negotiations and a televised appearance by the prime minister that offered no solution to the protracted, sometimes bloody crisis.

The so-called Red Shirts urged their supporters in provincial areas to confront the security forces, and many of them began setting up roadblocks outside Bangkok to prevent police reinforcements from entering the city.

Prime Minister Abhisit Vejjajiva spoke in a nationally televised interview yesterday, a day after rejecting a compromise offer by the Red Shirts — who say the current government is illegitimate — dashing hopes for a peaceful end to the standoff.

"We won't go home until we win," a protest leader, Khwanchai Praipana, told supporters following Abhisit's appearance.

He said many police and soldiers in the provinces sided with the protesters.

More than 1,000 protesters set up a roadblock overnight along a major highway, preventing police reinforcements from reaching Bangkok.

OC Transpo managers and union attend counselling

InTransit

Steve Collins

metronews.ca/intransit

When I heard OC Transpo managers and union executives were attending counselling together, I'll admit I snickered. ("Alain, when you say 'You're fired,' I feel invalidated.")

Isn't this something couples who can't stand each other do to prolong the agony? Indeed, in a joint news release (!) both the union and management say they are "fully committed" to the process. They want this to work.

If as a transit rider you're feeling like the disaffected kid caught in the middle of this ugly sham of a relationship, you're not alone, but adult behaviour has not been conspicuous from either side.

Far worse than the chaos and disruption of the strike was watching management, union and council complain about each other to the media day after day while refusing to even sit in the same room and exchange a word face to face.

The rest of us exhausted our ingenuity trying to get to work, to school, to doctor's appointments and on with our lives. Transpo's management and union weren't getting anywhere, and neither were we. Finally, the federal government intervened and legislated the buses back onto the streets. How long the strike would have lasted otherwise is anyone's guess.

We're still mopping up the mess. The scheduling issue that caused the strike continues to fester and, last week, the city dealt with the first of at least 18 taxi drivers accused of inflating claims on taxi cabs issued to the poor so they could get around during the strike.

The strike created an emergency, which necessitated the improvised and poorly monitored chit handout, and led to this disgrace.

No matter how ludicrous the idea seems of OC Transpo general manager Alain Mercier and ATU 279 president Andre Cornellier stuck in some touchy-feely encounter group, at least it's an open channel. Somebody's talking.

The participants say they're trying to "personalize interventions and focus on issues," which I think means stop pointlessly antagonizing each other, identify the real problem and try to solve it. Many of us learned this at an earlier age, but better late than never.

In addition to last month's labour counselling with the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Services, Transpo's management and union are scheduled to meet again for two-day sessions in May and June.

The process, say management and union, "could also result in continuous bargaining rather than a traditional bargaining approach with strict timelines."

This, too, is good news since the contract they're still wrangling over expires next year anyway. Maintaining a functional relationship is, like it or not, part of the job.

British government issues apology to Pope

Britain's Foreign Office issued a hasty apology yesterday to Pope Benedict after publication of an internal memo in which officials joked he could open an abortion clinic, launch a range of condoms or sing a duet with the Queen during a four-day visit in September.

The document, sections of which were published in the Sunday Telegraph newspaper, also proposed the Pope could bless a gay marriage, and acknowledge the clerical sex abuse scandal by establishing a hotline for abused children, or honouring abuse whistleblowers.

Junior officials wrote the memo following a brainstorming session intended to discuss ideas for the visit, the first to Britain by the head of the Roman Catholic Church since pope John Paul in 1982.

Though some included advice for Britain's government on how to approach the abuse scandal, the ministry condemned many of the proposals as "ill-judged, naive and disrespectful."

Britain's ambassador to the Vatican, Francis Campbell, met senior Vatican officials to offer a formal apology and one individual involved in drafting the memo has been transferred to other duties, the ministry said.

Film sets are wasteful places, actor says

It's not easy being green on a film set, says Colin Firth.

"It's a wasteful place," admits the Oscar-nominated actor.

"It is not ... because film people are free of conscience and they don't care about the planet. It's a very panic-stricken environment a lot of the time."

Firth says there are people in the film industry who will do anything to get a take on time.

"You get directors who say, 'Make the kid cry, get the scene right,'" he says with a laugh. "Things get wasted, thrown away, replaced. Whole sets go to landfill. Food gets laid out for the banquet scene and sprayed so it looks good but you can't touch it or eat it.

"The waste (even) to people who have no environmental conscience at all is pretty staggering to witness."

Firth was in Toronto over the weekend to accept an award, with his brother-in-law, for his support of the environment.

They received the inaugural International Entertainment Award from the Green Living/Environmental Media Association at the Green Living show, attracting a large crowd of environmental enthusiasts and Firth fans.

The Environmental Media Association is trying to mobilize the entertainment industry to educate people about environmental issues and inspire them to take action.

The association invented the concept of the "green carpet," the idea of taking a hybrid or alternative fuel vehicle, not a limo, to high-profile awards events.

Firth, his wife Livia, and her brother Nicola Giuggioli co-founded Eco Age in 2007, a London-based store that sells environmentally sensible products and offers consulting support to businesses on how to operate in a green way.

Accompanied by his famous brother-in-law, Giuggioli said in an interview that one of his goals is to show others that it is possible to run both a financially and environmentally sound business.

Email trouble for Goldman

Trader rushed to bet against mortgage market, message shows

As the U.S. housing market turned downward in January 2007, a Goldman Sachs trader wrote in emails to a woman he apparently was courting that investments he had sold were "like Frankenstein turning against his own inventor."

Lloyd Blankfein

"I'm trading a product which a month ago was worth $100 US and today is only worth $93," wrote Fabrice Tourre, who was charged along with the bank in a civil complaint filed this month by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. "That doesn't seem like a lot but when you take into account ... (the investments) are worth billions, well it adds up to a lot of money."

Tourre was talking about investment products like the one at the heart of a federal complaint against his firm. For Tourre, the investments were like an invention gone awry: He had started arranging them when the market was on the upswing. But he continued selling them after the market turned — now with Goldman betting against them, in one case allegedly misleading investors about a deal's origin.

Goldman Sachs Group Inc. released that email and 25 other internal documents Saturday in response to a U.S. Senate panel's release of messages in which Goldman executives boast about money they were making as the market imploded later in 2007.

When credit rating agencies downgraded many billions of dollars of mortgage-backed investments in October 2007, Goldman executive Donald Mullen was unabashedly pleased.

"Sounds like we will make serious money," Mullen wrote to Michael Swenson, another executive, in one of the emails released by the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

Goldman has argued vehemently it did not profit from the mortgage meltdown.

Swenson and Tourre, along with Goldman CEO Lloyd Blankfein, will face a public grilling on Capitol Hill tomorrow from the subcommittee.

Let's drink to salt of earth

Organic winemaking catching on

Wine can make people think of a lot of different things, especially good food, good friends and good times. Increasingly you can add another good to the list — good environmental stewardship.

Organic wines, which avoid the use of pesticides in grapes and is produced through sustainable farming practices, is becoming a more frequent presence on Canadian liquor store shelves.

The environmentally conscious consumer does not have to make a sacrifice to drink green wine. According to Hillary Dawson, president of the Wine Council of Ontario, there is no difference in taste or quality between organic and non-organic products.

Although there has been an increase in demand for organic products from consumers, Dawson says the decision to go organic goes much deeper than a business one. "It's not a need, it's a want," Dawson says. "Growing grapes requires a real deep connection to the soil."

The amount of green products available to the consumer might be even greater than it appears, according to Dawson. Although many producers use organic techniques to make their wine, Dawson says that the certification process to be recognized as organic is "onerous." As a result, a lot of farmers don't bother.

Many winemakers are growing their grapes using environmentally responsible methods.

"There are a million ways to show that you are sustainable," Dawson says. "I'm just proud that our producers are doing what they can to practise in ways that will ensure the long-term sustainability of the industry."

However, one winemaker that has gone through the process of organic certification says that it is important to do so. Bruce Ewert is the proprietor of L'Acadie winery in Nova Scotia. He says that there is only one way that consumers can be sure that they are getting an organic product — look on the label for certification.

"With marketing you can say anything," Ewert says. "When you put it on the label you know that a third party has been involved. It gives it credibility."

Sens see silver lining

'It's definitely a step in the right direction': Alfredsson

When the Senators gather one last time this morning to clear out the dressing room, they'll carry more than just their sticks and equipment into the summer months.

"There's a lot of good things that happened this year in the team and it's definitely a step in the right direction for us compared to the last two years," Ottawa captain Daniel Alfredsson said after the Senators' season came to an end Saturday night with a 4-3 overtime loss to the Pittsburgh Penguins.

The Senators were bounced out of the playoffs on home ice in a heart-breaking fashion — squandering a 3-0 lead in Game 6 and losing in overtime.

However, given that Ottawa was facing the reigning Stanley Cup champions and had already staved off elimination with a dramatic triple-overtime triumph in Pittsburgh a game earlier, they'll still take more good than bad out of the way the Eastern Conference quarter-final played out.

The Senators' playoff character annually comes into question, save for last year when there were no playoffs to speak of after Ottawa missed out, but not this time around.

The Senators, not the most star-studded team to begin with, played the series minus a couple of their top forwards in Milan Michalek and Alex Kovalev (knee injuries) and a top blue-liner in Filip Kuba (back injury), but still managed to throw a scare into the Penguins.

"We gave everything we had," defenceman Chris Phillips said. "In terms of effort and try, you couldn't ask for more."

Daniel Alfredsson of the Ottawa Senators salutes the crowd after an overtime loss to the Pittsburgh Penguins on Saturday.

After a regular season interrupted by injuries and poor performances that cost him the starting job to Brian Elliott, goaltender Pascal Leclaire at least redeemed himself somewhat with a franchise-record 56 save performance in Game 5 and another respectable showing in Game 6, although questions over either netminder's ability still remain.

Newcomers Matt Cullen and Andy Sutton enhanced their reputations and mainstay Anton Volchenkov, all of whom are scheduled to become unrestricted free agents this summer, restored some of his.

Then there was Alfredsson, who had two goals and six assists to tie Cullen for the team lead in points despite playing with a torn stomach muscle suffered late in the season.

The 37-year-old was fated after becoming the first player in franchise history to reach the 1,000-game mark for his career earlier this month, and further cemented his status as its best and most-influential player.

"What can you say?" asked coach Cory Clouston. "He's our leader, he's a warrior and he steps it up and plays through pain. He does a lot of good things, both on and off the ice. He leads by example."

Special teams play helps Coyotes force Game 7

The Phoenix Coyotes were at their best when they were up or down a skater, or two, and that gave them a chance to survive for at least one more game.

Phoenix scored its first three goals on special teams and Ilya Bryzgalov made 31 saves in a 5-2 win over Detroit yesterday that forced Game 7 in the first-round series.

"They won the special teams battle," Red Wings coach Mike Babcock said. "That sucked the life out of our team."

Phoenix will host the final game against Detroit tomorrow night.

"Any time you can play in a Game 7, it's a game you'll remember," Coyotes coach Dave Tippett said.

Detroit would love to forget how Game 6 started.

Detroit defenceman Brad Stuart nonchalantly carried the puck out of his end, Lauri Korpikoski snatched it and scored a short-handed goal 4:10 in to spark the win.

"My fault," Stuart said.

Mathieu Schneider snapped the Coyotes' 0-for-19 skid on the power play with a goal early in the second for a 2-0 lead, and Radim Vrbata scored with the man advantage midway through the period to restore the two-goal edge.

"I don't want to say we solved it," Schneider said. "It worked for tonight."

A summer job at a graphic design firm solved that problem. After she met her husband, she moved with him to Boston, then to Montreal after he got a job at McGill University. Since graphic design work was often sporadic, she decided to do her teaching diploma at McGill in 1972.

She began teaching in the visual arts department at Dawson's College. Then a job posting at Ryerson in 1977 caught her eye. She moved to Toronto, seeing her husband every two weeks and during the Chu was a bit unsure at first: The job was teaching basic design, but in the school of fashion.

As the years passed, Chu became increasingly interested in fashion, and in particular, colour. She observed how strong coloured, fashion-forward garments pull people into stores, but they often purchase conservatively hued pieces. She wondered about favourite colours: Do people like certain colours because they're appealing, or because they look good in them?

Chu began writing about these issues and discussing them with her students. In the late 1980s, she joined Color Marketing Group. This U.S.-based non-profit has members from a range of industries, including interior design, that meet twice a year to discuss which colours are popular and to guess what will be hot in upcoming seasons.

It then publishes the group's predictions. Fabric manufacturers and paint companies then use these colour predictions to help formulate new products.

To develop her own theories of what's the next hot colour, Chu's always observing what's going on in pop culture, politics, the economy and big events. She's always looking at fashion magazines and what people are wearing when she travels.

Chu's not always spot on. She says guessing colour trends is like predicting the weather: "If you're right 80 per cent of the time, you're OK."

Create a personal brand when job hunting

MAT LECOMPTE
for Metro Canada

A jobseeker's mentality is key to finding a job. By thinking like a business, it's possible that more businesses may come a knocking.

A fair question is what, then, does thinking like a business require? To organizational expert and entrepreneur Jane Woolsey, it will require an organized approach and developing a brand.

"It's all about standing out," she explains. "Employers will want to investigate someone that's taken the effort to go the extra mile. If there are 100 resumes in front of an HR manager, you're going to stand out from the crowd. You've only got one chance."

Woolsey suggests those on the job hunt adopt the mantra that looking for a job is full-time work. The hunter should schedule their day in blocks, inserting time for follow-ups, resume tweaking, phone calls and looking at various resources. Scheduling time in an organizer is recommended so the hunter can have a visual reference point to guide them. Also, she says the hunter must know what kind of work they are looking for.

"If you don't have a plan, you'll be all over the place," she warns.

In this market, however, she indicates that organization may not necessarily be enough. It's also important for hunters to create a personal brand.

Creating a personal brand involves consistency and personality. She says you'll want to create business cards with colours and fonts that look professional, while complimenting your personality. The colours and fonts should be consistent with the letterhead used for cover letters, resumes, envelopes and follow-up notes.

Helping women get to the top

KEITH CARMAN
for Metro Canada

Women may finally be climbing the corporate ladder faster and in greater numbers than ever before, but, as author Marcia Reynolds cautions, don't be a managerial lemming.

In her recent book Wander Woman: How High-Achieving Women Find Contentment And Direction (Berrett-Koehler), Reynolds, who hold a doctorate in psychology, points out that despite grabbing opportunity, not all of those employment acquisitions are beneficial.

"I did an informal survey with a group of professional women world-wide asking, 'Would you take a job to fill a quota?' The majority said yes, (feeling) this was the only way to make the changes to give women a voice at top levels and open doors to the women behind them," she notes.

"Although many would say that this is necessary to break down the control of the male elite, would you take a position based on filling a quota? This offer doesn't sound attractive to me."

An instructional book designed to develop and assist both current and aspiring female leaders in attaining/maintaining high-profile leadership roles, Wander Woman challenges those potential allowances in an effort to help women achieve managerial status on the basis of ability, professionalism and knowledge, not genius.

To that extent, Reynolds illustrates that companies must invest in their own future by re-aligning current executive mindset; eliminate hiring to "fill allocations" and establish stronger foundations of female employees moulded into management material beforehand, not as they assume the corner office.

"If leaders don't have enough qualified women to promote, they should work on how they develop them (management training programs, working with coaches/mentors) and create corporate cultures that appeal to top female performers. This process might be slower than imposing quotas but it's likely to get more buy-in from the women themselves."

Similarly, onus is not entirely on organizations. Those striving to take on greater leadership roles must ensure they have the skill set necessary for senior positions, lest they be seen as attaining titles they were thrust into. Such perspectives only create tougher challenges in proving merit or escaping negative, conceivably envious co-workers.

"Women have to be responsible for their own development. If their companies don't offer training and mentoring, they should seek it on their own," Reynolds asserts.

Yes, the 42-year-old British stand-up comedian is a transvestite, an issue he's addressed many times during various performances. Discerning between types of cross-dressers ("weirdo" versus "executive") and asserting that many men in women's clothing are in fact heterosexual, after 20 years as a comic, film and television star, Izzard is well beyond justifying his looks.

Not that it matters anyway. Sleek, self-assured and quite intellectual, as Izzard delves into his shows, the initially shocking visual aspect quickly evaporates as one becomes enraptured in his alluring ability to regale with engaging tales steeped in history and hilarity.

"I always say I talk about everything there ever was ... with gaps," he smiles, referring to his penchant for relaying factual situations with a humorous twist. "(Comics) have to talk about something and if you have no point of view on anything, you end up doing dick jokes or mother-in-law jokes which is incredibly boring. You have the pressure of talking about something but if you can articulate a point of view, you can talk about absolutely anything.

I discovered history which was waiting to be used." Taking that modus to its extreme on his latest tour dubbed Stripped, Izzard reveals plans to discuss everything from God — or the lack thereof — to old people dying in their beds, Greeks and Romans, Egyptians, cavemen and more. He notes that the show is yet another wealth of information delivered with sincerity, brevity and most importantly, humour.

"I saw a professor lecture on a subject that I'm interested in and it was incredibly boring. There was too much detail and it was monotone. I break it down: 'There were these people and they were f—ed up. Then these people came along and they were really f—ed up.' I cut it down and make it more street-accessible. Hopefully I'm not offering lessons so much as observations, though."

Still, as any devout Izzard fan knows, despite a general outline, there's always the potential for Stripped to careen off the rails nightly. Continually succumbing to his own tangents and affection for improvisation, Izzard often becomes so caught up in entertaining unscripted tales he becomes lost. "Where was I?" is as much a fixture of Eddie Izzard shows as his shocking appearance. At that, Izzard reveals that even with a host of items to discuss on Stripped's Canadian stint, he can't be sure exactly where it will go.

British stand-up comedian and noted transvestite, Eddie Izzard.

Eddie Izzard live

• Eddie Izzard performs at The National Arts Centre Southam Hall on May 28.

"Anyone gets bored with doing the same thing over and over again so I ad-lib as much as I can in every show (but) this show is well up to speed. I've performed in about 40 or 50 arenas so far, so Canada's getting it when it's in good shape ... I'm ready to talk more rubbish."

Ballsy move to raise testicular cancer awareness

HEALTH A young Nova Scotia-born filmmaker and photographer is preparing for an epic personal journey across North America, pushing a seven-foot rubber ball ahead of him to bring attention to testicular cancer.

"I've always had big ideas and been kind of out there," said Thomas Cantley, who got the diagnosis last year that would make most men cringe.

"Everyone's always told me I was ballsy even before I got this," he said following recent surgeries to remove his left testicle and several lymph nodes.

Cantley, who now calls New York City home, plans to create a documentary called Ballsy out of his travels, interviewing health care professionals and cancer survivors along the way.

"I'm 27. I never even had a cavity. I've always been healthy, then I'm told I have testicular cancer," he said. "It didn't really even hit me at first."

Cantley said he'd been in pain for months before he decided to seek medical help last fall.

"I want to create a movement for men's health because men just don't go to the doctor as often as they should."

His testicle was removed in New York but the lymph node surgery was done when he returned home to Nova Scotia.

The Vancouver Film School graduate said he wanted something therapeutic to keep him focused through the ordeal so he

"I'm 27. I never even had a cavity. I've always been healthy, then I'm told I have testicular cancer ... It didn't really even hit me at first."

decided to shoot his surgery.

The idea for the Ballsy project began taking shape as he lay in recovery and had a chance to talk to a 17-year-old boy who was just about to undergo the same surgery.

"I had no idea. He just really impacted me. Before I got testicular cancer I had no idea about this. It turned into a personal project to create awareness," he said.

Back in New York, Cantley was able to hook up with a producer and they started brainstorming ideas to create a thread for his documentary. They came up with the idea of pushing a giant ball from Los Angeles to New York and then from Toronto to Halifax.

Planning is underway as Cantley seeks corporate sponsors, works out his travel itinerary and logistical support and awaits the arrival of his eight-kilogram, giant white ball from the manufacturer in Italy.

He has already heard from the American Cancer Society, The Lance Armstrong Foundation and the Canadian Testicular Cancer Association.

Cantley said he hasn't set a start date yet but he wants to take advantage of good summer weather and has begun working out with a personal trainer in New York to improve his stamina.

In the meantime, he begins fundraising efforts with a silent auction in Halifax today.

Statistics compiled by Health Canada show testicular cancer is the most common cancer in young Canadian men between the ages of 15 and 29. When caught early, it is often easily treatable and curable.

In Alberta and British Columbia testicular cancer ranks first in cancer for men between 25 and 34 years of age.

Myers says Austin movie 'on track'

MOVIES

Mike Myers can't wait to revive his Austin Powers alter ego for another movie — but he's struggling to assemble his cast for production.

The funnyman announced last year he had begun work on another sequel. Myers insists the project is still "on track" but admits he has run into problems recruiting stars.

He tells MTV News, "Things are on track. It's hard to keep a ... team together and I'm very happy how insanely well it's gone. Then it gets hard to get everybody all together. (But) it's chugging along."

Michaels hospitalized

Poison frontman suffers brain hemorrhage

Bret Michaels is in critical condition suffering from a brain hemorrhage, his publicist said Friday.

Joann Mignano confirmed a report on People magazine's website Friday that said the former Poison frontman was rushed to intensive care late Thursday after a severe headache.

The report said doctors discovered bleeding at the base of his brain stem. Mignano said tests are being conducted and that no further information was available.

The 47-year-old reality TV star had an emergency appendectomy last week after complaining of stomach pains.

He said on his website that although the surgery "has taken its toll," doctors expected him to make a full recovery.

Michaels starred on the VH1 dating show Rock of Love and is a contestant on Donald Trump's NBC reality show, The Celebrity Apprentice.

Trump said in a statement Friday that he was "deeply saddened" to hear of Michaels' condition.

"He's a great competitor and champion, and I hope he will be fine," Trump said.

Want sauce with that? LiLo let-go and let-down

CREATING LUNCH-LADY FANTASIES FOR TEENAGERS ACROSS THE CONTINENT Jennifer Lopez has "offered" herself up for a guest role on Glee, reports female-first.co.uk.

The singer-and-actress — who stars in new romantic comedy movie The Back-up Plan — admitted she plans to take on more funny roles in the future and has been in talks with Glee producers about having a cameo on the show.

She said: "I was like,

'Yeah, yeah whatever. I'm a huge fan. Whenever you want ... I'm good.' I kind of offered myself up."

When asked by U.S. TV talk show host Ellen DeGeneres this past Friday about when fans could expect to see her in the musical drama, Jennifer admitted the only issue was timing.

She said: "I sat down with show creator Ryan Murphy and we talked me doing something on Glee. We want to. We want to do it.

"They have it all mapped out for the next, like, eight episodes, whatever is airing right now. So he's like, 'Let's wait and do it really right when you do come on.'"

If she does appear on the show, it is thought the 40-year-old star would play a cafeteria lady at the fictional McKinley High, with her character being given a makeover from Chris Colfer's character Kurt Hummel.

WONDER WHAT WONDERFULLY TRAGIC THING SHE'LL DO TO GET HER "CAREER" BACK ON TRACK? Lindsay Lohan has been dropped from the upcoming film The Other Side because she isn't bankable, a source close to the production tells TMZ.

The source says the film's finance folks were growing nervous about the actress and her spotty work record.

The film's writer/director, David Michaels, would only say, "Our team simply chose to move on from Lindsay and we'll soon be announcing a replacement."

Someone else doesn't trust Lindsay, although for different reasons. Michael Lohan paid a visit to daughter house in L.A. Thursday, bringing along the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department. He came to check on his younger daughter, Ali, 16, who is staying with Lindsay, according to people.com.

After officers inspected the house and interviewed Ali, they left her with her older sister.

"I went to the police department concerned about Ali's welfare," Michael Lohan told Hollyscoop.com. "I wanted to check on Ali. I want to make sure she's okay. She's 16 and she doesn't belong there. She's a minor."

Of the incident, Sheriff's Department spokeswoman Nicole Nishida says: "Michael Lohan called the West Hollywood Sheriff's and was concerned about the welfare of his [teen] daughter who was with Lindsay Lohan — I don't know if they were living together. Sheriff's deputies went out to Lindsay Lohan's apartment and were given access by Lindsay Lohan and determined that for the [teen] as well as for Lindsay, there was no danger at all. A report was taken and that was it."

Can't wait for swollen ankles

AND MONTHS OF NAUSEA

While starring — and earning great reviews — as the young lover in the hit Broadway play Time Stands Still this spring, Alicia Silverstone tapped into her maternal side with a little help from her wardrobe for the play.

"Wearing a pregnancy suit was so much fun," the actress, 33, tells People.

"I loved the feeling of pretending to be pregnant and having little arms and legs and this big belly."

But it wasn't just the suit that got her thinking about motherhood.

"I've been wanting to have a baby since I was two years old — I'm destined to be a mother," says Silverstone, who will celebrate her fifth wedding anniversary with musician-husband Christopher Jarecki on June 11.

"I can't wait to be pregnant."

MAY HAVE BEEN A GOOD IDEA TO TRY THAT WITH HIS WIFE FEW MONTHS BACK

Tiger Woods expressed his gratitude to his fans with a message on his website, saying, "I honestly didn't know what to expect from the fans, but they were absolutely incredible from Monday through Sunday. It was unreal."

"They defi-

Conspicuously absent from the statement was any word about support from Elin Nordegren. Woods didn't even mention his wife, who is currently in Sweden with their children.

Bralessness banned for Brit?

GLAD WOMEN FOUGHT SO HARD TO HAVE CONTROL OVER THEIR OWN BODIES — IT'S REALLY PAYING OFF Jamie Spears is working overtime to keep daughter Britney Spears on track, even going so far as to forbid her from going out without a bra, according to the Sun.

"Jamie's control over Britney's life is incredible.

He hates the pictures of her with her nipples all over the place so he has banned her from leaving the house without a bra," a source tells the newspaper.

"One security guard was told he is close to getting fired because he lets her go out without her bra."

Another source insists to TMZ that Jamie made no such ultimatum.

Metro Recipe of the Day

Broiled Shad with Mushrooms

INGREDIENTS:

700 g fresh (or frozen and thawed) shad, sole, or flounder fillets
1 tbsp butter or margarine, melted
1 tbsp lemon juice
1 tbsp finely chopped yellow onion
1 tbsp drained prepared horseradish
1 tbsp Dijon mustard
1/4 tsp salt
1/8 tsp black pepper
1 tbsp butter or margarine
2 cups sliced fresh mushrooms

2. Place fish on lightly-greased broiler pan rack. Tuck under thin edges of fillets. Brush with lemon mixture. Broil 5 inches from heat 3 to 6 minutes or until fish flakes when tested with fork, brushing once with lemon mixture.

3. Meanwhile, in medium-size skillet, melt 1 tbsp butter over moderate heat. Add mushrooms and cook 3 minutes or until tender. Serve mushrooms on top of fish.

METHOD:

1. Preheat broiler. Rinse fish and pat dry. In small bowl, stir together 1 tbsp melted butter, lemon juice, onion, horseradish, Dijon mustard, salt, and pepper.

There may be something of a personal nature that you want to be getting on with but if others demand your attention you will have to put them first.

CANCER

JUNE 22-JULY 22

You can handle anything that life throws at you. Yes, anything. It does not matter how tough the test you face today you will come through.

CAPRICORN

DEC 22-JAN 20

At some stage today you will be struck by a wonderful idea and you must make a detailed note of it right away.

LEO

JULY 23-AUG 23

You may feel obliged to commit yourself in some way, either to a family member or to a friend, but you really don't have to.

AQUARIUS

JAN 21-FEB 18

Will things get better in your life? Of course they will, starting from this very day, this very minute and this very moment.

VIRGO

AUG 24-SEPT 22

Keep a sense of perspective over the next 24 hours. You will see that a relationship won't collapse just because you have had a minor disagreement.

PISCES

FEB 19-MARCH 20

Focus your energy in a single direction and don't let anyone distract you from what you know you should be doing.

FINALLY FREE FROM ARTHRITIS PAIN WITHOUT DRUGS AND HARMFUL SIDE EFFECTS

Living with arthritis pain can affect every part of your life

It keeps you from enjoying the good things in life- time with grandkids, playing golf, even working in the yard. It would be nice to get out of bed – just one morning- without pain.

Every time you try and push through the pain... like standing or walking for a long period of time... you pay for it the next 2-3 days with even more pain.

DO ANY OF THESE SYMPTOMS SOUND FAMILIAR?

- Arthritic problems
- Osteoarthritis
- Rheumatoid arthritis
- Bursitis/tendonitis
- Degenerative joint disease
- Lumbar disc problems
- Aching pain in the arms or legs

Pain Pills Are Not the Answer

Do you remember the Vioxx scandal? It was a medication designed to relieve arthritis pain...but like all drugs, it had side effects. After years of use worldwide, the makers withdrew it from the market because of the overwhelming evidence it caused heart attacks and strokes. There's a time to use pain medications, BUT not before seeking a natural way to correct the CAUSE of the problem. Ask yourself...after taking all these pain medications...maybe for years...are you any better off?

Pain is not just "Old Age"

Have you had one doctor after another telling you this is just the natural process of the body getting older – that you should expect to have arthritis? Sure, if you don't take care of your damaged joints now, as you get older they will be worse. This is why you shouldn't wait any longer to see if we can help you.

We are the Ottawa Wellness Doctors. Over the years we have seen hundreds of people, all over Ottawa, come in suffering with arthritis and leave the office pain free. We have made it our mission in practice to help those suffering with chronic pain like you.

Here is what some of the top medical researchers had to say about chiropractic care.

"Chiropractic adjustments, with or without exercise, improved symptoms more than medical care did after both 3 and 12 months." – British Medical Journal.

"Chiropractic treatment was more helpful than any of the following: traction, massage, biofeedback, acupuncture, injection of steroids into the spine and back corsets, and ultrasound."

– Stanley Bigos, MD,
Professor of Orthopedic Surgery

Feel the Improvement – and Say "YES" to Life Again

With our "Arthritis Evaluation", we can find the problem and then correct it. Think of how you could feel in just a few short weeks. See and feel your life change for the better. Start your body on the way to pain-free, normal living. Feel tight joints rest, relax, free up. Feel the strength in your muscles increase. As you begin to see motion returning to your joints, you're preventing and reducing chances of disability and a crippling future. You're playing golf again – hitting longer drives, smoother putts, and lower scores...without pain.

Arthritis can be successfully treated. Healthy, pain-free living should be yours.

Just call one of our clinics today and you will get the "Arthritis Evaluation" for only $35.

This will include:

- An in-depth consultation about your arthritis where we will listen...really listen.
- A complete nerve, muscle, and spinal exam to find the "cause" of your problem.
- A full set of spinal images to look for joint degeneration (arthritis) NOTE – These would normally cost you at least $150.
- A thorough analysis of your exam and spinal images so we can show you how to fix the problem.

"I ONLY WISHED I HAD FOUND YOU SOONER"

We hear this too often, and it is time to do something about it and call today. We will answer all your questions about chiropractic care and arthritis pain.
